removed sensor, was in a tight area and difficult to remove got new sensor and tested resistance to the sensor, and compared it with new one, was much the same even when putting metal in front of it sensor connector had a lot of dirt in the rubber area and looked like sensor was not able to close all the way or causing lose connection cleaned out and put old sensor back in and plugged in connection ran swather and was not able to get the code to come back up did a wiggle test on the harness and no codes. ran at high idle and everything was good. i let the customer know my findings and told him to run it this fall and try it out. he was okay with that looked for any damage on the harness to the ecu everything looked fine
